

ABSTRACTAUTOMATIC CONFIGURATION OF A MICROPROCESSOR INFLUENCED BY AN INPUT PROGRAM

An automatic process for configuring a microprocessor architecture that consists of a number of execution units with configurable connectivity between them. The data and control flows within an input program are used to influence the process so that the resulting microprocessor is able to efficiently exploit parallelism available within the input program.